MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR

STATE OF TEXAS
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR
AUSTIN, TEXAS 78711

November 19, 1992

The Honorable Bob Bullock
One Capitol Square
Austin, Texas 78701

Dear Governor Bullock:

I have been advised by my General Counsel that I am required by the Constitution to submit the names of all recess appointees to the Senate by the tenth day of the next session following appointment. He has also advised me that the Senate is not required to act on a recess appointee during a special session. A copy of the General Counsel's memorandum opinion is attached.

Following this advice, I am submitting today the enclosed list of those who were appointed to boards or commissions in the interim which require the advice, consent and confirmation of the Senate. Included are names of appointees who are no longer serving for various reasons. It is my understanding that any length of service has to be validated by confirmation in order that the actions of the appointee cannot be declared invalid.

Sincerely,

/s/Ann W. Richards
Governor

M E M O R A N D U M

TO: Governor Richards

FROM: David A. Talbot, Jr.

DATE: November 12, 1992

RE: Submission of recess appointees

RECOMMENDATION: I recommend that you submit the names of your recess appointees to the senate by the tenth day of the special session. Although the senate may consider the names submitted even if you fail to do so, your constitutional duty is properly performed by your affirmative delivery of the names.

DISCUSSION: You ask for clarification of your duty to submit to the senate the names of those persons you have appointed during the recess of the senate.

The constitution states that the governor shall nominate a recess appointee (or some other person to fill the vacancy) to the senate "during the first ten days of its next session following the appointment" (Tex. Const., Art. IV sec. 12(c)). The provision goes on to say that if the senate does not act to confirm a recess appointee (or another person submitted by the governor), the governor shall continue to nominate during the first ten days of each subsequent session the recess appointee or another person.

The constitution next provides that if the governor fails to nominate the recess appointee to the senate during the first ten days, the senate "may consider the recess appointee as if the Governor had nominated the appointee."

The constitution then provides that if the senate does not act to confirm or reject the governor's nominee during the special session, the person may continue in office until rejected by the senate at a subsequent session or until the governor appoints someone else (Tex. Const., Art. IV Sec. 12(d)).

SUMMARY:

- * The constitution allows the governor to appoint persons to vacancies during the recess of the legislature.
- * During the first ten days of the special session, the governor is to nominate those appointees, or other persons of her choosing, to the senate for confirmation.
- * If the governor fails to submit the names to the senate by the tenth day of the special session, the senate is empowered to act on the names as if they had been submitted.
- * The senate is not required to act on a recess appointee during a special session. Whereas inaction by the senate during a regular session is considered rejection of the nominee, inaction during a special session has no such legal significance.
